

Don't you dare cave in to the whining of the bankers and hucksters who complain about complying with the excellent Wisconsin law prohibiting them from bothering those like me that've provided noticed that they wanted to be left alone in our homes. The bankers and hucksters have no inalienable right to bother me in my home. There is no good reason to trample the state's right to protect its citizens from their annoying intrusions.

This decision will indicate to Wisconsinites whether Bush politics and his appointees are craven or courageous, disengenuous or honest. We'll remember.
